PIANO EXPERIMENTS.

Playing by Sweeping the Strings With a Feather.

Open wide your piano so that the wires are exposed. Over the wires place sheets of music, and when you strike a tone you will find that it has a ringing quality. If you now play the same tone in the same manner, with the sheets of music still lying on the strings, it will sound as if the instrument were a banjo. Anyhow, it is a good imitation.

Now remove the music sheets and press down gently, but firmly, the keys belonging to any chord you play. The effect will be a slow, mellow, and the effect will be very beautiful, indeed, as if heard from a great distance.

The reason of this is that ordinarily a damper rests against each string, but when the corresponding key is struck or pressed down the damper is raised. In sweeping the strings with the feather, lightly, only the strings that are undamped sound, the others being held mute by the dampers, but if the touch of the feather is too heavy even the other strings may sound so your care must be in making it light and delicate touch.

Now press down a key gently and hold it. Strike very hard the octave above this key, but do not hold it after striking the tone. When the wire of the tone struck has been sufficiently dampened, so that it does not sound, the pressed down key will be heard to "sing" clearly, even though it was not struck. This is because every note struck is composed of several notes, being in reality a chord in itself, and each note contained in that chord causes the corresponding tone in the keyboard to vibrate, or "sing," in sympathy if held down in like manner.

The other notes that will sound under these conditions will always be the fifth above the octave, the second octave and the third and fifth above that, and these tones that sound are called "overtones."

For illustration, if C in the lower part of the piano be struck, any or all of the notes that follow will sound if their keys are first pressed and held down.—Philadelphia Press.

Weymouth Decoration Exercises.

At Weymouth the "Landing" the Decoration Day exercises were in charge of Rev. Frank B. Cressey, chaplain of the town. At his suggestion the church bells of the village were rung at 7 o'clock and tolled at 8:30. Chaplain Cressey was ably assisted by Comrades Oliver Houghton, officer of the day; Charles E. Bicknell, flag bearer; a work which he has done for many years; Charles H. Spear, conductor of Hunt and Lincoln schools; John Child, conductor of Tufts school.

A company of W. R. C. women and other friends, under the direction of Mrs. Agnes F. Baldwin, worked devotedly and successfully at the engine, filling two hundred baskets of flowers.

The procession was announced to start from the engine house at 9 o'clock, and the town clock was striking 9, the command of forward march was given. Striding a down Grand Army men were in line, the three or four other old soldiers of the neighborhood being prevented by feebleness incident to many years. Nearly two hundred children from the Hunt, Lincoln and Tufts schools were in line, most admirably led and directed by Principal Wilson of the Hunt, and the Misses Crombie, Gould, Tracy, Hallahan and Copic, teachers of the various schools. Each scholar carried a basket of flowers and a small flag, the latter of which they were to place on the graves of the fallen. The procession of children was headed by Francis Donovan, flag bearer, Miss Annie Gould as daughter of the Regiment, and by Wesley Wright with specially prepared national colors, accompanied by the engine, led by Florence Praga Bailey, Elsie Norris and Alice Smith. The entire procession was headed by three drummers and a bugler.

At the Village cemetery, where "sleep" ninety-two veterans of the Civil War, the procession and many other friends present were formed into a large hollow square, and brief exercises were held. Singing by all, "My Country, 'tis of thee," dropping the colors by the children under the direction of Post Color Bearer Horace L. Smith, draping the colors by Miss May Godfrey, recitation of President Lincoln's Gettysburg address by Principal H. F. Wilson, prayer by Rev. Robert H. Cochran, placing of flowers on graves by the old soldiers and school children, "Taps" by Francis Donovan, and a benediction by the Rev. Mr. Spear.

Before and after the Village cemetery exercises a delegation of G. A. R. men placed flowers on the two soldier graves in the Hunt cemetery, and on the two in the Reed cemetery.

Chaplain Cressey and his aids wish to express their special appreciation of the cordial co-operation of the principals and teachers of the three schools at the "Landing," without which the procession and exercises could not have been such an eminent success.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local application, as many cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one effective treatment, and that is by constitutional remedies. The use of the Kneissch-Tube, when used as directed, cures the most stubborn cases of deafness, and when it is entirely closed, it can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition. The tube is made of a special material, and is not affected by heat or cold. It is a perfect cure for deafness, and is the only one that can be used in all cases.

PIANO EXPERIMENTS.

Playing by Sweeping the Strings With a Feather.

Open wide your piano so that the wires are exposed. Over the wires place sheets of music, and when you strike a tone you will find that it has a ringing quality. If you now play the same tone in the same manner, with the sheets of music still lying on the strings, it will sound as if the instrument were a banjo. Anyhow, it is a good imitation.

Now remove the music sheets and press down gently, but firmly, the keys belonging to any chord you play. The effect will be a slow, mellow, and the effect will be very beautiful, indeed, as if heard from a great distance.

The reason of this is that ordinarily a damper rests against each string, but when the corresponding key is struck or pressed down the damper is raised. In sweeping the strings with the feather, lightly, only the strings that are undamped sound, the others being held mute by the dampers, but if the touch of the feather is too heavy even the other strings may sound so your care must be in making it light and delicate touch.

Now press down a key gently and hold it. Strike very hard the octave above this key, but do not hold it after striking the tone. When the wire of the tone struck has been sufficiently dampened, so that it does not sound, the pressed down key will be heard to "sing" clearly, even though it was not struck. This is because every note struck is composed of several notes, being in reality a chord in itself, and each note contained in that chord causes the corresponding tone in the keyboard to vibrate, or "sing," in sympathy if held down in like manner.

The other notes that will sound under these conditions will always be the fifth above the octave, the second octave and the third and fifth above that, and these tones that sound are called "overtones."

For illustration, if C in the lower part of the piano be struck, any or all of the notes that follow will sound if their keys are first pressed and held down.—Philadelphia Press.

—Twenty-five years ago, James M. Brand, who has just sold his place at 56 Cedar street, brought in his hands from New Hampshire the magnificent maple trees which line the front of his beautiful place. These were transplanted by him and have always received that attention that now makes them so attractive. There are about ten of them and where once they took so little space, the world now provides for a single man more than a week of constant labor to remove them, and many cords of wood could be piled up from them. However, they will all remain to beautify the street, as the new owner, Mrs. S. A. Tones of Somerville, will occupy on the removal of Mr. Brand. He (with newspaper). "Two had here a girl just died from eating too much ice cream." She—I am sure it wasn't anyone you know."

A small boy, pointing to the ambulance said: "You can't ride in the wagon unless you're get hurt or drunk."

Frank Porse of Claridge was held up by three men near Post Office last night. He was robbed of his watch and a pocket watch. The things were found in his pockets but overlooked $25 in his hat.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Somerville Journal has a final kind word for insurance companies under the old extravagant management. "They gave away good blotters."

His Wife's Quiet Reproach.
Admiral Capps, in an address to a temperance society, told how drink had once caused the downfall of a brave soldier. In the course of the address he said: "Sometimes, after a debauch, the man would be repentant, humble. He would promise his wife to do better; but, alas, the years taught her the barrenness of all such promises."

"One night, when he was an old man—a prematurely old man, thin limbed, stoop shouldered, with red rimmed eyes—he said to his wife: 'You're a clever woman, Jenny, a courageous, active, good woman. You should have married a better man than I am, dear.'"

"She looked at him, and thinking of what he had been, she answered in a quiet voice:—
"I did, James."—Kansas City Journal.

The Conductor's Mistake.
A conductor on the O'Fallon Park division of the St. Louis and Suburban Railroad had such a good run of business Sunday afternoon that he had difficulty in keeping himself supplied with small change. Many passengers who patronized his car handed him dollars and bills of larger denominations in payment of their fares.

The conductor, however, managed to get along fairly well until a woman carrying a tiny infant boarded his car. When he approached the woman she handed him a $5 bill.

"Is that the smallest you have, madam?" queried the conductor, fearing another stringency in change.

"The woman looked at the conductor and then at her baby, and made this surprising reply: 'Yes, I have been married only twelve months.'—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Proof of His Skill.
Frank Miles Day, the well-known architect and essayist of Philadelphia, stepped carefully from a Persian rug of dull green and old rose to another rug of rich blue, for the polished floor between was dark and smooth and slippery, like ice.

"Rather a good polish there, I think," said Mr. Day's host, a resident of Rittenhouse square.

"Remarkably good indeed," said Mr. Day.

The host just then slipped and nearly fell and the architect, with a laugh, went on: "A friend of mine has beautiful floors, and the other day he sent for a floor polisher."

"I want these floors polished," he said to the man, as he led him about the house. "They ought to come out as lustrous as rosewood. Do you think you're capable of doing them justice? Give me some proof of your thorough competence."

"That easily done, sir," the polisher replied. "You just ask Colonel Snow, next door but one, about my work. He'll tell you. Why, governor, on one polished floor of Colonel Snow's dining-room alone five persons got broken limbs last winter, while the ladies slipped down the grand staircase during the Easter week ball, and one dislocated her hip, while the other fractured three ribs. You ask Colonel Snow, sir. I polished that floor and that staircase of his!"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Glances of Life in Old Weymouth Two Hundred Years Ago.

[By Mrs. Elizabeth D. Ransley.]

Two hundred years seems a long time, looking ahead. Who can dare even to imagine what the conditions may be right here in the year of our Lord 1802? It appears a long road to cover, in the mind, and yet to go back 200 years, and try to gather clues to the life of those days, seems only a nice little friendly sort of journey.

Our grandfathers, whom we all remember, were most of them, born between 1720 and 1750. They may be presumed to have known their grandfathers, who must have been born before or at the beginning of the century, and so we get our six generations, and our 200 years. We have plenty of records and traditions to show us how these grandfathers "six times removed," lived and labored and died—it seems but yesterday, to some of us, that they ploughed these very fields where we are working today. They were the unfortunate "third generation," about whose ignorance and superstition, whose intolerance and spiritual darkness, so much has been written. What were the conditions socially, under which they lived? Let us try to discover.

Where, in the records of town and parish, can we find accounts of their meeting together for any sort of social gathering? Man is a gregarious animal, and prone to share his joys and sorrows with his fellows. He is wont to gather in companies, and we must search for the places of those gatherings if we want to understand his social diversions. Of course we must dismiss from our minds any ideas of social life as we know it today. We may as well be there as at once. Our ancestors of the first three generations were of different stuff.

Governor Bradford says: "They knew these things, but lifted up their eyes to the heavens, their dearest country, and quieted their spirits."
They had no wish for worldly diversions, their minds were set on heavenly things, and this life was but the ante-room to the life eternal—a room in which they tried to sojourn, and spoke long. So if we want to find the gathering place of the Reels and the Torries, the Hunts and the Whitmans, the Lounds and the Vinings and the Poles, we have not far to seek—it was at the Meeting House, always the Meeting House; (church was a word they did not use).

Two hundred years ago, the place where we now stand, the ground upon which this church is built, was little better than a reedy marsh, a sort of upland swamp. The house of the Rev. A. D. 1712, shown upon a little pond, bordered by tall bushes of sassafras and black alder, and fringed with giant sedge and rush (the "thatch" marsh), among whose spires the wild duck nested, pigeons and herons, and wild turkeys came there, and the little hoop-fir in the black mud of the shore, were those of the soft-eyed deer. A small stream ran out of it, and down across the meadow opposite, and joined the rushing brook which crossed the old Indian trail a half mile below—a brook now dwindled to a mere thread, but which was then a fair little river, in whose clear waters William Reed washed his sheep.

Clearings were to be seen here and there, the first forest came very close to the back doors of the humble but substantial dwellings which dotted the "trail" off to the northeast. Up on the beautiful hill we call Mosquito Plain, two or three of these comfortable gambrel-roofed houses were to be seen. The morning sun glittered on the diamond-paned windows, and lighted up the smoke wreaths which came from the massive chimneys. From their low doorways, the early risers could look down over the trees to the chimneys and roofs of the "Old City," the early settlement toward the south, just off of what is now Union street, and farther still to the south was the hamlet of Bridgewater, where some of them were wont to go for wives.

Turning his back on the rising sun, the early pot hunter in pursuit of the day's provisions would follow the trail through the woods toward old Braintree and by and by would circle round and come out in the little village on the "slink," at the head of the water-odd "Weymouth Landing"—where he might be able to add a neat catch of fish to his store.

Dwellers on this fertile and slightly plateau land have sometimes dreamed of the future cities and flourishing towns which their descendants would raise up in years to come—must have realized the value of this fair land, which had been given to them, in the distribution of the "Great Lots," without money and "without price," some parts of which remain today in the names of their original owners. They were long-sighted, these worthy ancestors of ours, and though we are prone to say they never could have imagined the progress of modern civilization, I am not sure they did not dream dreams and see visions.

Fifty years before, their fathers had helped their grandfathers, when they cleared the virgin forests, planted fields of corn, turned the stumped land into pastures, and built mills along the water courses. They lay at rest now, these two first generations, on the hill to the north which overlooked the bay—the hill whose feet were washed by the blue waters upon which the brave adventurers of 1619 had sailed into the haven where they would live.

his death comes as a great shock to those who knew him. The body arrived in New York yesterday and the funeral services will be held at the church of the Immaculate Conception, but the day has not yet been decided upon.

Uncongregational Church.

One of the prettiest observances by the Sunday school of Children's Day was held at last Sunday. The weather was most ideal and the church was very prettily decorated. The exercises were first led by a large and appreciative audience. While the entire Sunday school was present, the exercises were presided over by a group of daisies, the exercises were begun almost wholly by the primary and intermediate departments, which are under the care of Miss Adair. The singing was by a corps of assistants, and the prayer was by the chorists. The benediction was in the way of musical prayer, the intonation of a boy's chorus.

The meeting on Tuesday evening was in the interest of Home Missionary work and was addressed by Miss Miriam Webury, who gave a very interesting review of visits which she had made in schools and missionary homes on the frontier. She also spoke of the valuable assistance of the late Mary Tucker in the office work of the board. At the close of the dress, a committee was appointed, consisting of Mrs. E. C. Bradford, Mrs. D. Canfield, Mrs. J. C. Bradfield, and Mrs. E. Emer. They prepared a list of officers for the Home Missionary society to be formed in the church and to report the same at Tuesday evening.

At the close of the above meeting Ladies' Social union held a business meeting and voted to change the annual meeting to some date in June. A nominating committee, consisting of Mrs. N. D. Terry, Mrs. E. E. Bates and Mrs. A. Shaw, was appointed to prepare a list of officers for the ensuing year. The next meeting will be held next Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the parlors and a large attendance is earnestly desired.

The work to be done in a thorough workmanlike manner to the satisfaction of the Overseers of the Poor and completed within thirty days of the signing of the contract.

All proposals, to receive consideration must be by citizens of the town of Weymouth and received by the Overseers of the Poor not later than two o'clock of June 18th inst.

This board reserves the right to accept or reject any or all proposals.

By order of the Overseers of the Poor of Weymouth.

Glimpses of Life in Old Weymouth Two Hundred Years Ago.

[By Mrs. Elizabeth D. Ramsey.]

At marriages and at burials they had two long prayers, especially at the burials. Nothing in all their simple lives served to draw out so many people and so much enthusiasm as the funeral. It was a sincere gratification to them, to see that their dead were suitably and decorously started on their long journey. Records of the old days give pages to accounts of the funerals of deceased worthies. The hearse carried the coffin on their shoulders to the tomb in some nearby burying ground, or there was a grave made in the little enclosure which so many of the early settlers built on their home place. Mourning rings and scarfs were universally given to those invited to attend—one historian records "having a pewter tankard full of rings" which had been taken off at funerals.

The Sunday following the funeral was always observed in the meeting house by prayers for the bereaved family who had so recently in their pews while this service was going on.

Every feast they made, these pious ancestors of ours, opened with prayer, and closed with a psalm. For over a hundred years there was no gathering, even of the smallest dimensions which did not either begin or end with an invocation to the Almighty. Periods of private prayer, for help in sickness or trouble, were the rule, some pious neighbor or nearby minister being called in to lead. Religion was to them no small matter—the most insignificant details of their day were not too small for divine guidance. They felt the precarious tenure of their lives—every hour of those early days was fraught with more or less danger—and the simplest manifestations of nature, like cloud and tempest, had to them a spiritual significance.

One good grandfather records, that as he and his wife, riding upon one horse, the steed lay down, the day being hot, and threw them off, whereupon, "when they got themselves up out of the water, they went to prayer upon the bank, to praise God they had not been hurt."

Perhaps we cannot express a smile at the picture of these saintly Puritans, kneeling, dripping, upon the spongy bank of the town brook, and "giving thanks!" But we know they were in earnest, and our smile fades into a look of wondering respect. God was near them, had a care of them, and they tried to be grateful.

In another journal we read this entry: "Between one and two last night there was great lightning and sharp thunder; the lightning came down to my chamber. I humbly and thankfully bless God that we saw the quick and powerful Fire, heard the terrible Voice—and yet we live!"

Life was, indeed, a serious matter in those days. Their desire to depart from the customs of their forefathers, and to do away with everything that could remind them of the "Merry England" of the Stuarts, led them to forbid dancing, secular music, cards, games and public festivities of all kinds. The village sports of the mother country, the Maypole and the Morris-dance, were tabooed; riding to hounds was no sport, for there were no hounds, and the deer came to their very doors, to be killed. Shooting of game was not amusement, but business, to fill their hungry stomachs.

In 1685, one Francis Sturges petitioned for permission to open a dancing class in Boston, which was refused, with great indignation, by the town fathers.

Judge Sewall makes entry in his voluminous diary, from years ago, with great satisfaction, that "Christmas was not observed—wagons, etc., came to town, and business was done as usual."

The government and its official circle in Boston would naturally be supposed to be the center of purely secular social life, but the records show that beyond solemn and decorous dinner parties, there was little social diversion even there.

The life of the people here in Weymouth and in general, throughout the country towns early in the 17th century, of intense earnestness and gravity, of hard work, isolation, or remoteness from their neighbors, of early rising and early retiring. The family circle, "around the low candle and pine knots furnished poor light for reading or working. In the absence of visitors, of letters, of newspapers, of knowledge of the outside world, what was there to talk about, even if they wished to sit up and converse? Their lives, of absolute isolation and loneliness, no leisure for pleasure, families were large, help scarce (many families had an Indian squaw, or a "Guinea negro" in the kitchen, but of skilled service there was none); the women of the households were occupied every waking hour with the necessary labor to provide for their family's comfort—spinning the flax they had raised themselves, weaving, cooking, candle-making, knitting, there were no factories and the busy men went out at daybreak to sow or to reap, clad in the leather jackets made by the village "cordwainer" and wearing stout boots, from the hides of their own cattle, made by the country cobbler. Think of that, here in this old New England! Their work was faithful, slow, and we realize it when we try to pull down the mighty and picturesque stone walls they so abundantly built—a feature of the landscape which it is an actual pity to remove!

They rose at dawn, raked open the fire in the big fireplace and hung up over it the three-legged iron pot (made down here in Taunton by their kinsmen the Leonardas at their forge) filled it with cornmeal and water, for the breakfast of "clumpy pudding," went out and fed and watered the cattle, did the milking, and came in to breakfast. As they stood in their low doorway, at half-past six by the tall clock in the "great room," and looked out over the wide highway, where perhaps a human foot would pass all day. Did they realize what a lonely life they led? We can only wonder.

GATHERED UP.

Some writers have a fine flow of other writer's thoughts.

And the more justly some men get the more they are dissatisfied.

If the parents of a girl want her to marry a certain young man all they have to do is pretend that they have no earthly use for him.

Some people save a lot of time by telling the truth.—Chicago News.

Wife—I want to talk with you about some thing we need for the house.

Husband—What are they?

Wife—Well, to begin with, dear, don't you think we need a new bonnet?—Stray Stories.

Society is full of people who would be perfectly delighted if they could only remember what they meant to say, says the Fortnightly Review.

"You recall the old French saying?" asked an old politician at the Union League Club last night. "Well, here it is: 'Beware of the expression 'They say.' It is a catchword of gossip and the shibboleth of liars.'"

It was John Foster who said of a man of his acquaintance that his memory was "a row of books to hang grooves on."

Every one hopes and prays that in a very few years more a reasonably just system of road-making will have been discovered and adopted on all frequent country roads.

Less Display in Entertaining.

Folk are now entertaining on a plainer scale. They ask fewer friends at a time, but have more parties.

There is not the ostentatious competition that there has been, and "crashes" are no longer necessary to the popularity of a hostess.

Strains of Modern Life.

We must admit that the accessories of modern life in general are placing greater and greater strain on the faculties of the individual.

His eyes are strained by the intense artificial lights, his ears are worried by the unnecessary din of the streets, and his nose is offended by the vaporization of offensive fumes of oil or by the fetid air of the stable. That simpler life, which to him from the maddening sphere of the inventor's activities—The Lancet.

Didn't Know Her Name.

A village doctor whose most troublesome patient was an elderly woman practically on the free list, received a sound rating from her one day for not coming when summoned the night before.

"You can go see your other patients at night," said she. "Why can't you come when I send for you? Ain't you money as good as other people's?"

"I do not know, ma'am," was the reply. "I never saw any of 'em."

He Wasn't Biting.

Senator Knox has a good story of the last fight the late Senator Quay of Pennsylvania made in the Senate. Quay was working hard on the Statehood bill, and struck up to get him away from the Senate for a time. Quay was very fond of tarpon fishing and had a winter place in Florida. One afternoon he received this telegram from a friend, who thought the senator might be better off in business than putting about the new States:

"Fishing never so good. Tarpon biting everywhere. Sport magnificent. Come!"

Quay read the telegram and smiled a little. "I will be there," he answered it thus.

"Tarpon may be biting, but I am not, M. S. Quay."—Saturday Evening Post.

In the clerk's office of Mecklenburg County, N.C., this 16th day of December, 1918, I find on file copy of the acts of the general assembly of Virginia. In it are found passed by the assembly on Dec. 20, 1878, certain resolutions which were enacted to vote to do so. This is the bill: "Any elector qualified according to this act failing to attend any assembly or election shall be liable to a fine of ten dollars and if a poll be taken to give aid to give to his vote shall pay on fourth of his portion of all such levied taxes as he may owe and shall be levied in his county the ensuing year. And for discovering such defaulters the sheriff or other officer taking the polls shall within ten days after the passage of the poll book certify to the county or corporation cast, the amount payable, a copy of the poll by him taken, to be kept in his office, who shall be liable to a fine of five dollars for every copy thereof, and the said clerk —The Deweys went to Braintree last Saturday afternoon and played the Braintrees. The game was the largest attended and most stubbornly contested played on French's common this season, and was won by the Deweys 2 to 1. Kate, the regular pitcher of the Deweys, did not show up and Morales was put in the lot. He proved that no mistake was made in doing so. He pitched an errorless game, having 12 strikes out; in fact, his playing the ball was perfect. In the morning of July fourth, the Deweys and the batting of Blanchard were the features of the game for the Deweys, while the fielding of Conahan was the feature for the Braintrees.
